Future Perfect Simple and Future Perfect Continuous

You use the future perfect simple (will/won't have + past participle) to talk about an action that will end before a specific time in the future.

I'll have finished cooking by the time the guests arrive.

You use the future perfect continuous (will/won't have been + -ing form of verb) to talk about an action that will still be happening at a specific point in the future. The focus is on the action as an ongoing activity.

We'll have been living in this apartment for ten years next September.

You can use phrases like by or by the time (meaning "at some point before") and in or in a day's / two months' / five years' time (meaning "at the end of this period") to refer to a specific point in time.
