The von Engelbrechten family live in a very unusual place. Their home is on the small island of Fofoa and they are the only people who live there. Fofoa is about one kilometre long and the island is part of Tonga, a country in the South Pacific Ocean. It is quite close to other islands in Tonga, but it is about 1,800 kilometres from New Zealand and around 4,000 kilometres from Australia.

There are five people in the von Engelbrechten family – Karyn, the mother, who is from the UK; Boris, the father, who is from Germany; and their three sons Jack, Luca and Felix. They've got a two-bedroom home on a small hill with an amazing view of the ocean. The house is high up because they don't want the ocean to come into their living room!

The family drink rainwater and grow fruit and vegetables on the island. Sometimes, they travel to a larger island nearby to bring back food.

Karyn and Boris are happy to have nature around them, and Luca and Felix enjoy their life on the island. Jack, the oldest son, lives in New Zealand now. He goes to school there because he wants to be around other young people. Karyn teaches Luca and Felix on the island. She makes sure that they get a good education, just like children who go to school.
